WHAT CAUSES HAIR STRUCTURES TO BECOME DAMAGED?

Excessive combing, dyeing and perming as well as heat from hair dryers and curlers, intense sunshine and salt water will make hair brittle and prone to split ends.

The hair structure becomes damaged, hair breaks, yet the hair roots remain active.

Each hair consists of three layers:

1 THE MEDULLA:

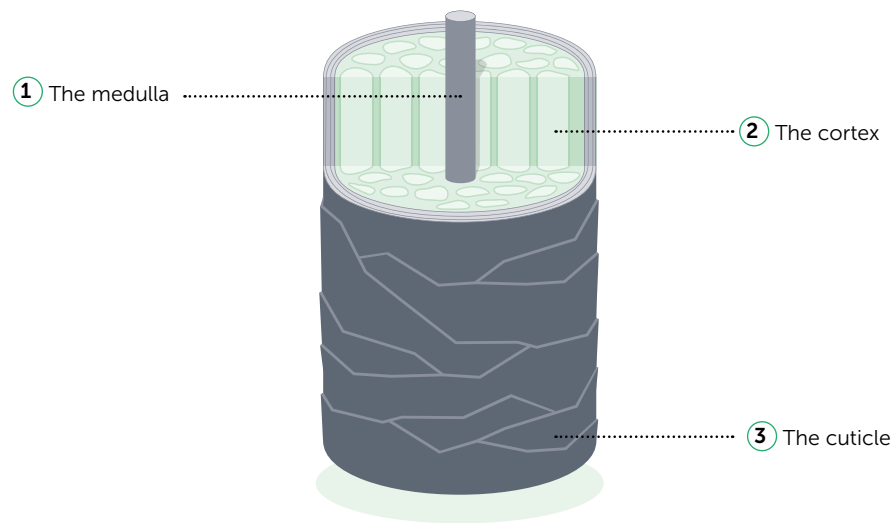

It is the innermost layer of every hair and consists of keratin. Keratins (fibrous proteins) make up the structure of each individual hair, making the formation of hair possible. They lend hair the necessary moisture, tone and elasticity and offer protection against sunshine, cold and heat.

2 THE CORTEX:

As the thickest layer, it comprises 75 to 90% of a hair and is made up of parallel keratin fibres. It largely determines the hair's nature, i.e. its structure, colour, elasticity, thickness and moisture content.

3 THE CUTICLE:

Just like a pine cone, the hair is protected against harmful external influences by a multi-layered thin cuticle. This cuticle is transparent and therefore allows the colour pigments in the hair to gleam through.

POSSIBLE CAUSES OF HAIR DAMAGE:

- Excessive backcombing
- Dyeing, bleaching, perming, exposure to chlorinated water
- Heat from hair dryers, curlers or straighteners
- Intense sunlight, salt water
